

7 SURVEILLANCE TOOLS AND FEATURES THAT INSURERS LIKE TO SEE

A good surveillance system will help protect your assets, but it can also positively impact your insurance coverage and costs. Here are some things to consider.

PERIMETER PROTECTION.

The more comprehensive your perimeter security, the better: if you can incorporate sturdy structures, sensitive alarms, well-placed cameras, and close human attention, you're off to a great start.

ALL-WEATHER PAN-TILT-ZOOM CAMERAS.

The ideal camera setup will include weather-proof devices with extensive range of motion and focus abilities, day and night vision, power backup, and two-way voice capability.

FENCING.

One of the more effective and affordable barriers available, there's a fence for every site and situation. From anti-climb varieties to sturdy steel hoarding, you're bound to find fencing to suit your needs.

PROPER AND PROMINENT SIGNAGE.

It's best to back up your claims, but merely displaying signs at different points around your site can go far to deterring would-be trespassers.

LIVE MONITORING.

Real-time monitoring via a remote monitoring station is one of the best ways to limit crime. You'll want a remote station that can provide full-site video tours, at minimum every 15 minutes.

BACKUP MONITORING CENTRE.

It's always good to have a backup plan. This is a crucial safeguard if a power surge or another disruptive event were to impact the main monitoring station.

A GOOD REPUTATION.

Anti-theft measures are useless if they're not carried out properly, so make sure the surveillance company you choose to work with has a good reputation. Their knowledge and care at the outset should instill confidence in their commitment to you.
